Prostate enlargement and prostate cancer are two separate conditions that can affect the man's prostate as they age. As men age and their prostate gland enlarges due to benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH), they may experience a variety of urinary symptoms. These symptoms often result from the enlarged prostate pressing against the urethra, obstructing the flow of urine.

- Increased frequency of urinary
- Weak urine stream
- Difficulty initiating urination
- Dribbling at the end of urination
- Sudden urge to urinate (urgency)
- Urinary retention

Men who have the symptoms mentioned above are interested to know if they have BPH or prostate cancer. During this free public forum, you will learn from urologists about:

- What is BPH
- Symptoms of BPH
- Surgical vs Non-surgical options for treatment
- Differentiating prostate cancer from BPH
- Overcoming prostate cancer diagnosis
